James Heckman James Heckman (born 30 May 1952) is a professor of economics at the University of Chicago. Heckman is known for his work in economics and econometrics. Heckman developed the LATE (Likelihood-based Approach to Economic Calibration) model, which is used in many schools as a method to evaluate the economic benefits and costs of government programs. Heckman won the 2019 Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Sciences with Christopher P. Dubnam for their work on the "likelihood-based approach to economic appraisal". Early life and education Heckman was born in Bridgetown, Barbados and spent his early years in Barbados. His mother was educated in Britain and his father was a textile worker in Barbados. Heckman's parents did not have much of a formal education, and his father died when he was only seven years old. Heckman has said that he took interest in many things, even before starting school, and became fascinated with mathematical and statistical problems. Heckman became an undergraduate at the University of the West Indies. He went on to earn a B.Sc. in economics in 1976 from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He earned a Ph.D. in economics in 1979 from the University of California, Berkeley
